ELL w/a Disability

English Language Learners (ELL) with a disability make up a fairly large percentile of the k-12 range of special education students across the USA and require additional accommodations. Assessments are held in both English and Native tongues, to determine proper eligibility. Special screenings are held to determine if a student needs both ESL and bilingual services or opt out.

what we do

We are responsible for designing and building your child's IEP and additional services needed which include ELL and bilingual accommodations. We provide parent, student, and staff support and can ensure materials are provided in preferred media and language(s). Our firm also works with LEAs, charter schools, and various school districts across the nation which helps build strong relationships that can help make sure your child's ESL staffing support is met as well.
